Here are five key points from the video:

1. Historical Convideo of the US-Mexico Border: The speaker's research focuses on detailing the history of a relatively underexplored section of the US-Mexico border, emphasizing its marginalization in historical narratives, particularly in the convideo of the Mexican Revolution and US historical accounts.
2. Archival Research Process: The research involved extensive archival work across multiple locations, including New Mexico and Mexico City. The speaker utilized various archives to gather information on both sides of the border, which is crucial for understanding the historical dynamics in that area.
3. Dialectic of Violence: The speaker discusses a concept called the "dialectic of violence," which encapsulates the ongoing cycles of violence and conflict that have shaped the border region. This violence includes conflicts against Indigenous peoples (like the Apache), revolutionary raids, and the struggles of settlers adjusting to modernization.
4. Modernization Efforts: The study traces modernization efforts during the Gilded Age in the United States and the Porfirio Díaz regime in Mexico, focusing on the economic and social transformations that occurred in the border region and the impacts on local populations, including the marginalization of long-established communities.
5. Rethinking Border Perceptions: The speaker hopes the research will challenge misperceptions of the border as inherently violent and instead highlight the complex national identities and relationships between the US and Mexico, underscoring both conflict and cooperation in shaping this historically rich area.
