

Faculti Summary

<https://faculti.net/enemies-among-us/>

Here are some articles and topics that are similar to the video you , focusing on themes of internment, historical memory, civil liberties, and the experiences of specific ethnic groups during wartime:

1. "Japanese American Internment During World War II": This article would discuss the history of Japanese American internment, exploring similar themes of government fear and racial profiling that led to the incarceration of Japanese Americans, as well as the long-term psychological effects and civil rights implications.
2. "The Internment of Italian Americans in World War II": This article focuses specifically on the experiences of Italian Americans during the war, paralleling John's research on the internment policies that affected not only Japanese Americans but also Germans and Italians.
3. "Civil Liberties and National Security: Lessons from World War II": This piece examines the broader implications of wartime internment policies on civil liberties, drawing connections to contemporary issues of national security and immigration, similar to John's reflections on modern parallels.
4. "The Historiography of War-Time Internment": This article reviews the existing literature on internment in the United States, highlighting gaps, particularly regarding German and Italian internment, much like John's observation about the lack of comprehensive accounts.
5. "Children of War: The Psychological Effects of Internment": This article delves into the specific experiences and psychological effects of children interned during conflicts, resonating with John's insights on the varying experiences of children and adults in internment camps.
6. "Fear and the Erosion of Civil Liberties: A Historical Perspective": This work discusses how societal fears can lead to the curtailment of civil rights, using historical examples from World War II, including the internment of ethnic groups and the lessons that can be learned for present-day situations.
7. "Comparative Analysis of Civilian Internment During Global Conflicts": This article explores internment practices in various countries during World War II, including Japan, Germany, and Italy, shared insights on similarities and differences in internment experiences, aligning with John's future research focus.
8. "Remembering Internment: The Role of Personal Narratives in Historical Understanding": This piece emphasizes the importance of personal stories and narratives from survivors of internment camps, akin to John's approach of incorporating personal history into understanding collective trauma and historical memory.

These articles converge on themes of inter-group tensions, historical memory, civil rights, and the psychological impact of being interned, much like the themes discussed by John in his video.