

Here are some articles that discuss similar themes and topics regarding international law, China's role in global governance, multilateralism, and the dynamics of international institutions:

1. China's Rise and the Future of International Law:

This article explores how China's growing influence is reshaping international legal norms and institutions. It analyzes whether China's vision for global governance aligns with multilateralism or if it primarily aims to challenge Western hegemony.

2. The Belt and Road Initiative: Global Governance or Geopolitical Strategy?:

This piece examines China's Belt and Road Initiative, considering whether it represents a genuine attempt to build a new international order or if it serves as a means for China to expand its influence at the expense of existing institutions.

3. Transnational Advocacy Networks and Global Governance:

An analysis of how transnational advocacy networks operate within the international legal system. It discusses the role of lawyers and activists in influencing state behavior and institutional change, much like what was mentioned in your video about building regimes alongside existing structures.

4. International Regime Complexity: Building Institutions in a Changing World:

This article delves into the concept of international regime complexity, describing how multiple overlapping institutions can address contemporary challenges and how states navigate these complexities when pursuing their interests.

5. The Role of China in Global Health Governance:

This analysis reviews China's contributions to global health governance, particularly in the context of the World Health Organization and other international health initiatives, providing a critical perspective on China's effectiveness and intentions.

6. Counter-Hegemony and the Global South:

A study of how emerging powers like China and India engage in counter-hegemonic strategies to challenge Western-led global governance frameworks. It aligns with the notion that China may not genuinely seek to lead but rather to undermine established systems.

7. Tariffs and Trade Wars: Implications for Global Economic Governance:

An exploration of the rise of protectionism and tariffs in international trade relations, analyzing how these trends affect the global trading system and institutions like the World Trade Organization.

8. Backlash Against Globalization: The Rise of Nationalism:

This article discusses the resurgence of nationalism as a reaction to globalization, examining how it impacts international cooperation and the functioning of global institutions, reflecting on the concerns articulated in your video.

These articles would provide a comprehensive view of the current international legal and political landscape, particularly focusing on China's role and the evolving dynamics within global governance.