

Faculti Summary

<https://faculti.net/moving-beyond-statements-and-good-intentions-in-us-law-schools/>

This video discusses the systemic racism highlighted by the murder of George Floyd and the global pandemic's impact on awareness of racial disparities. The speaker reflects on the necessity of addressing racism in society, notably within law schools, by emphasizing self-examination, policy reforms, and inclusivity in the legal profession. They describe the historical context of police brutality experienced by Black communities, the awakening of many individuals to these injustices, and the importance of recognizing structural racism.

This video outlines challenges faced by law schools, including the composition of faculty, the admission process (like the LSAT), and the bar examination. It emphasizes that most racism is institutional and subtle, rather than overt. The speaker advocates for approaching these issues with a commitment to continuous reflection, teaching anti-racist practices, and ensuring diverse perspectives in legal education.

They highlight initiatives at Boston University Law School aimed at fostering diversity, inclusion, and belonging among students, particularly those from underrepresented backgrounds. The speaker expresses optimism about changing dynamics in legal education, particularly with a new generation dedicated to equity and justice. Overall, the message promotes hope for progress in combating racism within the legal system and society as a whole.